Leonard Fuels is more than a small business; it is the bedrock of the local community.

It's a business that has been run by the same family for over 70 years, employs local people, and provides the kind of reliable, caring service that larger, more distant companies can't match.

The business was started by Keith Leonard in 1936, "using a flatbed truck and 5 gallon cans that he would haul up customers' stairs and bring into their houses," said Rozanne Leonard-Stewart, who is Keith's grand daughter and the manager of the business today.

After a hiatus during WWII, when Keith Leonard enlisted in the army, Leonard Fuels reopened upon his return, in 1948. When Keith's son Roy Leonard got his oil burner mechanic's license in 1962, he started Leonard Heating, which later was amalgamated with his father's business.

The business has expanded to include servicing of furnaces, air conditioners and heat exchangers, as well as the provision of fuel and lubricants to homes and businesses throughout the region and into Kingston.

Our facilities have been recently renovated in order to better service our customers. We are able to provide a constant supply of oil for winter heating, and servicing of furnaces to comply with the increasingly rigorous government regulations faced by homeowners. We carry new Brock furnaces that are 98.5% efficient.

"For us, it's all about being a part of the community, and providing good service to our customers. Everything else changes, but that stays the same," said Leonard-Stewart.

And for 65 years, plus 5 before the war, that has been the source of Leonard Fuels' success.
